

For General Public accessing the Society Web site (non-members area)

“The Society does not collect any personal information from people just visiting the public areas of our site (the ones you can see before you have to log in to the members area), except if you fill in an application form and email it to the Society. All we do is gather some basic anonymous information, for example how many people have visited our web site and view each page, so that we can make sure we're doing a good job and to make our site better.”

For Members

“Rushden Permanent Allotment and Small Holding Society Limited only holds personal data that you, the member, have supplied to the Society. This data is only used by the Society and is not shared with any third party. The data is only used to communicate with you in the running of the Society.”
